Tip You can import a JPEG, TIF, GIF, or BMP image. Figure 11-1. It's best to import images at least 5 megapixels in size for best results. This photo was too small, so the canvas is pixelated. * Resize the image.

Click the Resize button (the icon with the arrow pointing down) at the bottom of the workspace (or from the Image menu). Then drag the slider to the desired size. You can also set the Resolution (in inches) in the top right of the Properties window. Press Q to cancel or Enter (?-F on Macs) to accept the changes. At the bottom of the workspace you can see the change in proportion. When the Adjustments panel appears, you can choose a preset for image enhancement (see Figure 11-2 to one of the Presets, or use the dialog box \((top)\) to control the Auto Levels option \((bottom)\), and so on.), top). There's a little muscle for editing every adjustment box. *

* Sharpen/Blur.

This controls the sharpening and blurring effects and can make a big difference in an image's appeal (see Figure 11-2 to one of the Presets, or use the dialog box \((top)\) to control the Auto Levels option \((bottom)\), and so on.), bottom). Click the Sharpen/Blur button (the icon with the sharp and blur symbols side by side). Next, drag the slider to your desired effect. To change the amount of sharpening, click the Adjustments panel at the bottom of the workspace; then drag the Sharpness box up or down to adjust the amount of sharpening. To change the blur effect, drag

Kandô (composition) Kandô (;) is a composition in the kana syllabary (katakana) by Toru Takemitsu composed in 1987. The work is composed in five movements, each with a roughly two-minute length, and also has a sixty minute continuous sound mix in black and white. The work is divided into three parts. Part A was composed by Takemitsu in the summer of 1983 in Kyoto, and was premiered by Toru at the Yamaguchi Teikoku Daigaku Piano Festival in December of that year. Part B was composed in December 1986 on a U.S. tour for a live performance, and Part C was composed some time in 1987 in New York for a performance by The New York Arditti Quartet in concert with Takemitsu. It was not until ten years later that the three parts were combined to complete the work. The piece was written in the key of A-minor, in dorian mode. The composition Kandô is a moving piece with eight parts, each with its own theme. The main theme is the return of a person or thing, with themes of the return of the clouds, the return of the sun, the return of the rising sun, the return of light, the return of the lost light, the return of the greening spring. The second theme is the return of spring, and the third is the return of love. The fourth and fifth themes are the return of horses, and the return of light over the city and over the sea respectively. There is also an eighth part which is a continuation of the first movement, but with much more complex solos and a more intense feeling. The first movement lasts for about 30 minutes, and is a slow, peaceful piece with a "curious" atmosphere. The second movement, in contrast, has a heavy and urgent rhythm, and a bracing spirit. The third and fourth movements are of a more tranquil nature, and take place in the past. For the third movement, the return of spring, Takemitsu includes the sounds of marching and the breaking of branches in the wind. It has a deep and calming feeling. The fourth movement, the return of light, is dominated by the sound of a drum beating, and the light of the setting sun, and is meant to represent the return of humanity to the earth. This movement has a meaning of love and connection between the city and countryside. The first part

A customer selects items for purchase from a shelf display at a retail space in South Portland, Maine, on Nov. 3. Sales of everything from furniture to foodstuffs have been disappointing this holiday season, leaving retailers scrambling for sales to make up for the holiday slowdown. Sales at U.S. stores rose a modest 0.2 percent in November from the previous month, according to the Commerce Department's Commerce Department, and November's sales growth marked the slowest rate of growth in more than six years. In an interview, Wal-Mart's chief financial officer reiterated the company's strategy of focusing on low prices, including a push on Black Friday, the day after Thanksgiving, an event that traditionally kicks off the holiday shopping season. Wal-Mart has been promoting the Black Friday deal on door-buster items and has partnered with big names such as Apple, Coca Cola and the NFL to boost online and mobile sales. But Sam Williams, who oversees the company's store operations, said consumers may have postponed holiday shopping until after the Thanksgiving break because of recent flooding in Alabama and the wildfires in California. "We do know that the U.S. was affected a lot this past summer and fall," Williams said. "We feel that those events have definitely affected retailers' customer traffic in general." Williams declined to comment specifically on Black Friday sales. But he said Black Friday purchases have been consistent with levels last year and that foot traffic in stores has been "steady or up." With Americans focused on family and spending time with loved ones this holiday season, sales of toys and other gift items in November grew just 0.2 percent, the weakest performance in six years, the department said. Analysts had expected sales of such goods to increase in November and December by 0.3 percent and 1.9 percent, respectively. Sears Holdings Corp., the parent of Sears stores, announced plans in October to close 150 more stores, including 20 in the U.S., laying off more than 2,600 people as it struggles to adapt to consumers' preferences for purchasing from online retailers. But some retailers are resisting changes to their retail model as they hope for a strong holiday sales performance. Dick's Sporting Goods Inc., which operates a chain of sporting goods stores, said Wednesday that Black Friday is helping its annual sales performance. The company, which is on track to profit during the holiday season, has not dropped stores recently. U.
