It is generally believed that this drop is due to poor glycosylation, improper folding, or loss of PDI-like co-factors in the ER. Our study reveals that certain mutations in the ATP-binding pocket cause a complete loss of the mature glycoproteins in the absence of proteasomes, which thus leads to the accumulation of partially folded intermediates. Most importantly, such accumulation is associated with the generation of "smoke signals" of agglomerated oligomeric or even polymeric species in the ER, which underlies the formation of ER stress and the death of the transfected cells. The Golgi resident CRT-0014 cation-independent mannose 6-phosphate receptor (CI-MPR), which mediates the retrieval of lysosomal enzymes from the TGN/EE, is a sorting receptor in the early secretory pathway. Upon the degradation of the glycoproteins, both CI-MPR and CRT-14 are downregulated in HCT116 cells, supporting the hypothesis that the disruption of the assembly/trafficking of lysosomes by ERAD-defective glycoproteins likely impairs the recycling of both receptors. One of the most important and widely used methods for the initial screening of potential candidates for ERAD is the ER misfolding indicator (ERM) assay. The
