The present invention relates to a brake pedal for a vehicle which is driven by stepping on the brake pedal, and more particularly relates to a brake pedal for a vehicle which is capable of adjusting a stroke of the brake pedal. In conventional brake pedal devices, various devices for adjusting the stroke of a brake pedal have been proposed. For instance, Japanese Utility Model Application Laid-Open No. 63-61715 discloses a brake pedal device, wherein a plurality of reset springs which are respectively disposed on the brake pedal and a vehicle body, urge a pedal adjusting rod in a vehicle width direction. Thus, the brake pedal is operated to be moved in the vehicle width direction, and the stroke of the brake pedal is adjusted. However, in the above device, when the brake pedal is operated, it is necessary to simultaneously produce urging forces against the push-in of the pedal adjusting rod and against the biasing force of the reset springs. Therefore, a large effort is required for operation of the brake pedal, and thus, the brake pedal is hard to operate. Further, a large number of members are required for the device, and thus the production cost of the device is increased. Further, when the brake pedal is not stepped on, the brake pedal is biased by the reset springs to a portion near the distal end thereof, that is, a portion which is not urged by the reset springs. Therefore, the brake pedal is not necessarily moved to a position near the end of a brake pedal stroke of the vehicle. Thus, the device may not be sufficient in a function of the brake pedal. Further, in the brake pedal device, in order to return the brake pedal to a rest position, in which the brake pedal is not stepped on, the reset springs are connected to a spring chamber of a spring. Therefore, the reset springs may vibrate while the brake pedal is moving, and may be bent. Further, the reset springs may resonate due to a reaction force of a piston of a hydraulic pressure generating unit when the hydraulic pressure is released, 3da54e8ca3
