Chiari malformation in a large adult population: a prospective evaluation of clinical and radiographic features. The objective of this study was to assess the incidence and pattern of symptoms in an adult population with Chiari malformation (CM) and its relation to imaging features. Among 245 consecutive patients with CM, symptoms were observed in 17 (28%). The symptoms included unsteadiness, paraesthesia in the feet, dysarthria, double vision, tetraparesis, gait impairment, numbness, altered proprioception, intermittent headache, and dizziness. There was a suggestion that symptoms correlate with the severity of caudal displacement and in those patients with syringomyelia. The majority of patients with CM have no associated symptoms despite the presence of severe caudal displacement. Some patients have few symptoms and this can be explained by the fact that their magnitude of caudal displacement is less than that in others. Symptoms, when they occur, are mostly likely to be transient in nature and should not be viewed as the only indicator of an associated syrinx.
