Thankfully, the last of that tragic tale was nearing a close..The Larsen B Antarctic ice shelf has collapsed. The remaining shelves of Larsen B collapsed on 13 September, leaving an 11.2 km wide and 80 km long iceberg named A68. Iceberg A68 has a volume of at least 1,800 cubic kilometres and measures 32 km across. It has a surface area of 1,150 km², which is approximately 3.4% of the Larsen B ice shelf. Melting ice from the berg is released into the sea. The remaining berg is reported to be drifting north-west towards the Weddell Sea. The Larsen B ice shelf was the fifth largest ice shelf in the Antarctic and covered an area of 81,000 km². It was located on the east coast of the Antarctic Peninsula, between Cape Royds in the north and Cape Evans in the south. It was discovered in February 1978, and was the largest such feature of the Antarctic ever documented. It was originally identified as a separate ice shelf, but during the early 1990s, it was seen to have become progressively smaller and unstable and, on 1 December 1995, a large area of approximately 17,000 km² was reported to have collapsed. This led to the identification of several smaller ice shelves around the peninsula. The area of the collapse reached 1,500 km² and subsided about 50 m, with a 4.4 km ice-flow of 2 km². To the west of the immediate collapse site, a new icesheet formed, which involved the collapse of an area of around 56,000 km². In recent decades the Larsen B ice shelf has contributed to sea level rise by losing around a cubic kilometre of ice per year, with very little to slow its progression. As a result, contributions to sea level rise are expected to increase in the future, due to the lack of an appropriate response to the instability of the ice shelves.Q: PHP Session for a similar use case i
